

Bike, Blade, and Board Scenarios

Scenario 1

You and your friends are inline skating on the sidewalk, close to your home. While riding fast, one of your friends trips on the curb and falls. Her knee is cut and bleeding and her hands are scraped. She says she's okay.

Scenario 2

You and your family enjoy inline skating and always stay on the sidewalk and paved paths. While riding with your friends, they want to meet up with another group of kids from your class. In order to do that you must cross a busy road, something you don't feel comfortable doing, but must do if you want to hang with your friends.

Scenario 3

You and your friends are riding your bikes home from school. By the time you get home, it is starting to get dark outside. The front light on your bike isn't working and you do not have reflectors. You tell one of your friends, but she says it doesn't matter because she has one and you are only half a kilometer to your house. Your friends tell you they've cycled home in the dark many times, and that you'll be fine.

Scenario 4

You and your friends go to a bike park after school to practice some tricks. Your parents insist that you wear your helmet and knee pads, but none of your friends are wearing any protective gear. While you're putting on your helmet, your friends laugh and tell you to hide it in a bush and leave it behind.

Scenario 5

You and your friends are skateboarding after school in your school yard. You try a move but land twisting your ankle. It is scratched and sore to move.

Scenario 6

You and your friends are going to a friend's house to watch a movie. Your friends want to ride their bikes. However, your mom has asked you to stay off your bike until she can fix the brakes. You really want to see the movie, and your friends assure you that you will be home before your parents return.
